The T(h)ree Lives by K. Rajagopal

Part short film and part social experiment, The T(h)ree Lives is inspired by the late Pak Cik Tubi Moh Salleh who helped a blind woman, cross the road every day for five years to get to her workplace.

Inspired by the true story of Mdm Rosie Wong, this film is a creative reinterpretation of her life. Told from her perspective, it focuses on the three seminal people who helped her: her mother, her teacher and a kind stranger who helped her get to work every day for 5 years, rain or shine.

Director's Note by K. Rajagopal

“ In a film like this, which has a social concern and directly relates to our society, we have to make the audience think about what we're doing and that is filmmaking for me.”

I took an actress out in the streets and I wanted to see if people would still help her cross the road... I wanted to see if the spirit of this man, Pak Cik Tubi, is still alive. And it is. It is still alive in Singapore.
